A student from the College of Communication and Media wins the “Creativity” Photography Award at the Arab Media Summit.

Ahmed Sameer Badwan, a student from the College of Communication and Media – Abu Dhabi Campus at Al Ain University, was awarded the "Ebda’a" Arab Youth Media Award in the Photography category during his participation in the Arab Media Summit, which brought together leading media professionals and enthusiasts from across the Arab world.

This achievement is a true reflection of Ahmed’s creative talent in photography and serves as a testament to the high standards demonstrated by Al Ain University students in regional and international forums. It also highlights the university’s commitment to nurturing young talents and supporting promising media professionals through modern academic programs and hands-on training that keeps pace with the fast-evolving media landscape.

In recognition of this outstanding accomplishment, Dr. Noor El Deen Atatreh, Vice Chairman of the Board of Trustees at Al Ain University, received Ahmed Badwan in his office and honored him for this prestigious win. Dr. Atatreh expressed the university's pride in its students' achievements, emphasizing that this success reflects their excellence and the university's role in enabling them to compete and innovate at all levels.

Dr. Atatreh also noted that Al Ain University places special importance on discovering and developing student talents across various fields, providing a supportive academic environment that fosters creativity and initiative. This aligns with the university's vision of preparing a generation capable of making an impact and driving change.

Al Ain University continues to support youth-driven initiatives and innovative projects, firmly believing that investing in young talent is the foundation of progress and sustainable development, and that every individual achievement by a student is a success for the entire institution.
